The dark side of reality TV

Maybe you thought TLC's Jon and Kate Gosselin were hurtling toward divorce anyway.

Perhaps you thought MTV "Teen Mom" Amber Portwood would end up in the court system, reality show or not.

But surely you see a clearer, more disturbing connection between Bravo's "Real Housewives of Beverly Hills" and Monday's sad, shocking news that "RHOBH" husband Russell Armstrong died by his own hand according to the Los Angeles County coroner.

Russell—reportedly dealing with crushing debt and assault charges from an altercation with his estranged wife, Taylor—previously blamed the show—originally set to return to the Bravo airwaves on Sept. 5—for the couple's problems.

"Did I push her?" Russell told People in a July interview. "Yes, maybe things happened in the heat of the moment, but it was during a time in our lives that was not characteristic of who we were. This show has literally pushed us to the limit."

Now Bravo is mulling how to proceed with the popular show.

The answer is easy.

"I would scrap the season out of respect for the family," said Douglas Rudin, executive producer and owner of Chicago-based Reality Producers, adding: "[Russell] probably suffered much more than he would have had he not been in that position of living a lavish lifestyle he couldn't afford, and on TV no less."

Agreed, and this officially marks the "Housewives'" Jenny Jones moment. "The Jenny Jones Show" was the popular '90s talk show that—like its TV counterparts—shocked guests with secret crush reveals. In 1995, one such reveal led to the death of guest Scott Amedure, a gay man, who, after admitting a secret crush on best friend Jonathan Schmitz, was later murdered by Schmitz.

Jones never regained her appeal.

The same could happen to Bravo's moneymaker if these execs don't show some heart. Hopefully, audiences will appeal to their sense of decency by boycotting any show that lingers on the topic of Russell.

Good luck with that, said Tiffany Torrence-Davis, a native South Sider and alum of Oxygen's "Bad Girls Club" (Season 3). Torrence-Davis, who since has moved on to acting, bets audiences will want even more Russell on this upcoming season.

"It's the drama they want, and I know that firsthand," said Torrence-Davis, who next stars in the Chicago-based "It's a Hard Knock Life." "People aren't saying 'yes, he killed himself,' but they do want to see if he'll be mentioned and if Taylor will come back the season after."

I didn't want to believe Torrence-Davis. Then I stumbled upon this callous comment on E! Online.

"Why should us fans not be able to watch it on time just cause some panzy a*s guy wanted to kill himself," posted by the user "WTF Really."

WTF indeed.

Heavy winds knocked down trees and a stage Thursday during a music festival in Belgium, killing at least three people. The Chicago band Smith Westerns was performing when the storm hit. REUTERS

Chicago band on stage during concert disaster

From news services

HASSELT, Belgium At least three concertgoers were killed and many more injured when a stage at the open-air Pukkelpop Festival in Belgium collapsed Thursday during a set by Chicago band Smith Westerns.

A heavy storm hit just as the band began playing. The band was able to get off stage before the collapse and was unhurt, according to frontman Cullen Omori's Twitter feed.

Later in the day, he said in a statement that the band had finished its first song when the stage began shaking. They assumed it was "a storm passing through. We were about to play the next one when our tour manager yelled at me to run off the stage. Right then [a metal bar that holds up the tent] collapsed 1 foot in front of" guitarist Max Kakacek.

"Amid the chaos it was hard to tell exactly what had happened," the statement continued, "but after the rescue teams started coming in it became clear that there were severe injuries and we are now being told there are reports of multiple deaths. Our thoughts and prayers go out to the families who lost loved ones in today's tragedy."

A further 40 festival-goers were injured, seven of them seriously, when a brief burst of high winds and heavy rain flattened tents, uprooted trees, pulled the roof off a stage and brought down giant screens, officials said.

One person was killed on the festival grounds and another on a campsite, Hilde Claes, mayor of the eastern Belgian city of Hasselt told a news conference. The local fire service later said a third person had died.

Reported attendance for the three-day sold-out event, which started Thursday in Hasselt, about 50 miles east of Brussels, was estimated at 60,000. It was the second major stage collapse at a pop concert in the past week; five people, including one Chicagoan, were killed Saturday when a stage at the Indiana State Fair collapsed.

The Smith Westerns were "shaken but safe," said Daniel Gill, their publicist. He added that it was their first date on a two-week European tour and most of their equipment was destroyed, "though, of course, that's kind of an afterthought at the moment."

City enlists consulting firm

Mayor Emanuel announced Thursday the city will pay a private consulting firm to find cost savings in existing city contracts, a move he hopes could save at least $25 million by 2013.

Live where you work? Why not?

By Ruthie Kott

FOR REDEYE

The entrance to Allilamodie Original Clothes is in a busy alley right behind RSVP Gallery (1753 N. Damen Ave.). The doors are open for several hours during the week and on weekends, and people can wander in and out, looking at fashion designer Allison Helliwell's hand-knit dresses and sweaters.

It's nothing new for Damen's boutique row. But here's the difference with Allilamodie: Helliwell and her boyfriend, Justin Utecht, also live in the store. To the right of the design studio, which includes racks of clothes and Helliwell's large work table, are the kitchen and the living area, and up a small flight of stairs are two bedrooms.

"The space needed a lot of work, but the rent here—even with the live space included—was significantly less expensive than the rent on a Wicker Park/Bucktown storefront of comparable size," Utecht said. Storefronts in Wicker Park can cost more than $2,000 per month. But Helliwell pays about $1,800 per month in rent, which includes her living space, and spent just under $5,000 in renovations. With two full bathrooms and bedrooms, she and Utecht have an extra bedroom for a roommate to lower the cost even further.

Most small-business owners don't have a choice: Chicago law says only artists can live and work in the same place, and only in approved zones.

In September, Ald. Proco Joe Moreno (1st) plans to introduce an ordinance that would allow artists as well as other kinds of small-business owners—think chefs, attorneys and accountants—to rent a single space to live and work. The proposed ordinance would permit ground-floor work/live space in all business districts and allow working/living in commercial districts with a special-use permit.

"Chicago was really built on family and independent businesses: family in back, storefront up front," Moreno said. "And with so many vacant storefronts in the neighborhood, it seems like a win/win: Landlords get tenants, and entrepreneurs can afford to house their own businesses."

Workers build the nest in the Lincoln Park Zoo.
STEPHEN MARKLEY FOR REDEYE

Bird is the word at Lincoln Park Zoo

By Stephen Markley

FOR REDEYE

It's difficult to say if living in a cramped space for 24 hours while surviving off nothing but sugar water and beef jerky would count as the best, the worst or just the weirdest job in the world, but that is what the cast of a new National Geographic Wild show was tasked with this week at Lincoln Park Zoo.

The show, "Live Like an Animal," follows hosts as they attempt to re-create the conditions of animal environments on a human scale. This week, it was a hummingbird's nest. Series producer Richard Pearson explains: "[The show] combines natural history, engineering and three eccentric Englishmen, who all bring something to the party." It's scheduled to debut next year.

Lloyd Buck, one of the hosts nesting this week, added, "Well, you have to be a bit eccentric to want to do this."

Buck, the show's resident bird specialist, was tasked with delivering the details of the nest. For instance, hummingbirds use spider silk to build nests so that when their "Tic Tac-sized" eggs hatch and the chicks grow, the nest can expand outward. To replicate that, the show used 1,800 feet of bungee cord.

"Eccentric? No, I don't like that," said James Cooper, another nester and a marine engineer responsible for the creation of structures. "That makes me sound like I have a disorder."

"Shut up and put your bird mask back on," said Matty Thompson, the third wannabe bird, a naturalist.

In addition to living inside the man-size hummingbird nest set up right in the middle of Lincoln Park Zoo, the three men were given nothing to eat but 80 liters of sugar water (hummingbirds eat their own weight in nectar each day) and beef jerky catapulted from afar to replicate the protein from bugs the hummingbirds catch.

Show backers said they chose Chicago as a shooting location in part because of the Air and Water Show on Saturday and Sunday. Buck is scheduled to be taken for a ride on one of the stunt planes.

"The male hummingbirds do a 9-G dive to attract the ladies," Pearson said. "So we wanted to re-create the male hummingbird experience of that dive, and the Air and Water Show was perfect for that."

Is global warming moving animals?

A warming climate is driving animal species to higher latitudes and higher ground at a rate far faster than previously believed, researchers from Britain and Taiwan said Thursday.

The researchers found habitats for a variety of species — from English songbirds to Malaysian moths — had shifted either uphill or away from the equator by an average of 11 miles per decade since the 1970s. That's nearly three times as fast as had previously been believed, said I-Ching Chen, the study's lead author.

The study was released by the journal Science, which is publishing the findings this week. It not only indicates faster changes but also points more directly to climate change as the cause than did previous studies, said Chen, a researcher at Taiwan's Academia Sinica.

Shifts in habitat were greater in regions where temperatures have gone up more, she said.

"The relationship between distribution change and temperature change is significantly correlated," Chen said. "I think that's strong evidence that global warming caused this change."

PARI'S PICKS

We made Fire defender Pari Pantazopoulos choose between his birthplace (Greece) and the place where he spent his adolescent years (Chicago). Well, sort of—we gave him a series of fun faceoffs. c.s.

Lake Michigan or the Mediterranean?

GETTY IMAGES FILE

The Mediterranean.

'Get Him to The Greek' or 'My Big Fat Greek Wedding'?

"My Big Fat Greek Wedding." That's my family right there, big and obnoxious, oh my God. Besides the Windex part—that's extra [invented in the movie]. It's funny, like 20-25 of us went and saw it. That's how we are, big, loud and obnoxious. That's our culture.

Driving in Chicago or driving in Athens?

Oh my God, I think driving in Chicago. You don't wanna mess around with those guys in Athens. All you hear is honk.

INTO THE FIRE

FROM CHICAGO TO GREECE AND BACK AGAIN, LOCAL SOCCER PRODUCT PARI PANTAZOPOULOS IS LIVING OUT HIS DREAM

By Chris Sosa

REDEYE

Attention, friends and fans of Chicago Fire defender Pari Pantazopoulos: Your birthday shopping for him just got a lot easier.

Option 1: A no-trade clause in his contract.

Not that we're trying to start trouble for the 22-year-old rookie. It's just that Pantazopoulos can't contain his excitement when talking about playing for the Fire. You can tell because all his words have that rapid-fire, holy-cow-this-is-really-happening-to-me quality to them.

"I'm here right now, and to play ... I used to watch, like, Franky [interim coach Frank Klopas] play, Peter Nowak, Chris Armas—all these guys, all these world-class players, and it's kind of cool now," he said. "I'm back with Franky. Logan [Pause], he was a rookie when I started watching, and now he's a captain. Small world. It's awesome."

But before Pantazopoulos could suit up for the team he rooted for as a youth growing up in the Chicago area, there was the matter of the audition.

In January, he flew back from Greece—his birthplace and the country where he kick-started his pro career right out of Prospect High School—to compete in the Fire's annual tryout. For two days, he had to outshine more than 200 players from 19 countries. Next he had to impress the coaches in preseason training, and then and only then was he offered a full contract.

Mind you, in the three years the Fire has held this tryout, no one had ever earned a full-time roster spot.

Jumping through all these hoops was a no-brainer for Pantazopoulos. His family moved from Greece to Mount Prospect when he was 10, in 1998—the same year the Fire franchise was formed. After an All-State high school career, he played professionally in Cyprus and Greece for three years.

"That was fun, the atmosphere [in Greece]," Pantazopoulos said. "You know all the Europeans are crazy about soccer. You lose at home, and they want to, like, kill you. That's how it is because they're so passionate about the sport and the team. It was good experience; that's what I think got me through [the tryout]."

And because he was enjoying Greece so much, Pantazopoulos wasn't about to cross the Atlantic for just anyone.

"No, no, no, no," he said when asked if he would even consider trying out for another team. "Always, since I was a little kid I was dreaming in my sleep that I wanted to play for this club. Since the franchise started in '98 I've been supporting this club. After the games, out at dinner I'd see DaMarcus Beasley, C.J. Brown, Kelly Gray and all these guys. It was just so awesome. I know I've said this over and over again ... but it actually is a dream come true for me."

Option 2 for your shopping list: playing time. OK, so he's on his own there. He's appeared in only one official match for the Fire this season, but his teammates notice that he's doing everything he can to change that.

"Players like Pari are important," Pause said. "He maybe hasn't had his number called very often this year, but he's continuing to grow. He's young, he's got a good strong upside, and those are guys that bring a great attitude every single day to training. For someone who doesn't get a lot of minutes, that's a hard thing to do, and Pari's done a fantastic job at that. Not only is he getting better, he's making our team better."

When Pantazopoulos does see the field, as he did in a July friendly against Manchester United at Soldier Field, funny coincidences tend to follow.

"ALWAYS, SINCE I WAS A LITTLE KID I WAS DREAMING IN MY SLEEP THAT I WANTED TO PLAY FOR THIS CLUB. ... IT ACTUALLY IS A DREAM COME TRUE FOR ME."

— Chicago Fire's Pari Pantazopoulos

"I came in in the 88th minute, and that's the year I was born, 1988," he said. "So that was kind of weird. I only played for like three or four minutes, but it was awesome because I've always wanted to ride on the bus, go underneath the tunnel, get out with the team in front of 65,000 people."

Lastly, Option 3: a picture frame for moments he'll want to capture. Like his run-in of sorts with Manchester United midfielder Anderson.

"I fouled Anderson, and after the game I came up to him, and I'm like, 'I'm sorry, I'm sorry,'" Pantazopoulos said. "And he's like, 'No, it's all good.'"

The same can be said of Pantazopoulos' time in Chicago so far.

CHSOSA@TRIBUNE.COM | @SAYITISSOSA

The original 'Clash of the Titans' or the remake?

The remake. I haven't seen [the original]. [Laughs.]

Sandals (a common footwear choice in Greece) or gym shoes?

I'll say gym shoes.

'Fame Story' (a Greek reality show) or 'American Idol'?

Oh my God, these are classic. "Fame Story" by far. It's how the Greeks think [that makes it fun to watch].

Mythos beer or Goose Island?

Mythos. It's just the Greek professional beer.

Nia Vardalos or Maria Menounos?

Oh my God ... by far Maria.

Bottled or tap water?

Bottled water. [The tap water in Greece] is not so good.

Grass or FieldTurf?

Grass by far. There's a lot of FieldTurf out in Greece, but grass, there's no better environment. I hate plastic [artificial turf].

3 How would you prevent scandals in college athletics?	Make them do their own homework for a semester. This all stops.	By limiting friends with benefits.	Pay 'em. Seriously, they make schools millions of dollars.	Well, I wouldn't pull a Mike Leach and lock a kid in a closet. That's for sure.	I'd create new positions called security guards/tutors, and they'd be really funny. Boy, there's a sitcom.

GAME PLANS

The announcements came fast and furious Thursday: The Bulls released their preseason schedule; the Blackhawks unveiled their national TV schedule; the Wolves announced their 2011-12 schedule; and perhaps the biggest of them all was the UFC revealing it had made a deal with Fox to air mixed martial arts matches live. Here's the rundown.

BULLS

The Bulls are scheduled to open their preseason against the Michael Jordan-owned Charlotte Bobcats on Oct. 10 at the United Center. Other home games are Oct. 14 against the Timberwolves, Oct. 21 against the Pacers and Oct. 27 against Scott Skiles and the Bucks. The Bulls' road schedule calls for them to travel to an undetermined location to play the Pacers on Oct. 13, Sioux Falls, S.D., to play the Timberwolves on Oct. 19 and Oct. 25 to conclude their schedule in Charlotte against the Bobcats. NUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE PHOTO

WOLVES

Led by new coach Craig MacTavish, the Wolves will open their 2011-12 season at 7 p.m. Oct. 8 at San Antonio. The Wolves' home opener is set for 7 p.m. Oct. 15 against Milwaukee at Allstate Arena. Of their 38 home games, 23 will be played on the weekend (14 on Saturday, nine on Sunday).

UFC

The UFC's landmark seven-year deal with Fox calls for four UFC shows on the network each year. The UFC also will appear prominently on cable network FX, with live fights on most Friday nights and a revamped version of "The Ultimate Fighter," the UFC's popular reality show. GETTY IMAGES FILE PHOTO

BLACKHAWKS

The Hawks will appear on 13 national telecasts—12 exclusively on either NBC or Versus—next season. In addition, the Hawks will appear on the NHL Network six times.

Worrying is in midseason form

So, nothing like hitting the reset button—again.

I'm not one to get to shook up over preseason openers Who am I kidding? Of course I am—you know me—but let's see nine sacks.

Nine. That's like double digits. J'Marcus Webb, they did explain to you what the left tackle does, right? I would suggest watching "The Blind Side" with Sandra Bullock. Heck, watch anything with Sandra Bullock.

Chris Williams—still trying to figure it out. That would be fine, but it feels like it's what, your fourth year? Oh, that's because it is. They're hiding you at left guard. I think they should hide you at another career. I see you in the actuarial field. As in you're actually this bad.

Roberto Garza, taking over for Olin Kreutz. Great. Still too late to call Kreutz? Let's feel him out.

I almost forgot, two newbies on the right side—Lance Louis (played some tight end in college by the way) and Gabe Carimi. I'm not sold on Carimi because of the first name—Gabe. It's like he's a dentist or something.

Another note: Chester Taylor, you are out of a job. Matt Forte, time to close the mouth and play. I saw Marion Barber steamroll the Bills. Looks like that's the gameplan to me. Go big, line it up, and smack 'em hard. Could work.

What doesn't work is making Carlos Zambrano a leader. Blame the knucklehead if you want, but I blame the Cubs. They see things in people that aren't there, pay them accordingly, and suffer, suffer, suffer. (LaTroy Hawkins, anyone? Not a shutdown guy. Cubs tried to make him one anyway.)

When someone does want to lead—Ryne something or another—he's shunned. I think Joe Girardi wanted that job too. Oh, the mind wanders.

It wanders when watching the Sox too. It also wonders. It's schizo, is what it is. The Sox are AL division champs one night, gutless wonders the next.

Now I know why people smoke.

Just admit it—pilots always have been and always will be cool

REDEYE

Make sure your items aren't blocking the aisles. Ick-snay with the electronic devices.

Most important, place your pop culture seat in the upright position.

As the 53rd annual Chicago Air and Water Show swoops into the city this weekend, it's time once again to pay attention to the pilot, a profession that is experiencing a high-flying moment in TV, film and pop culture at large.

Witness the following: This fall, ABC's "Pan Am" will offer a glamorous, vintage look at life in the cockpit during the '60s—call it "Mad Men" in the air. Elsewhere in the pop stratosphere, there's Hollywood hottie Ryan Reynolds, who recently portrayed a pilot in the summer blockbuster "Green Lantern." And don't forget that "Rise of the Planet of the Apes," currently in the box office's top 10, features a pilot in a pivotal role.

All of it is in line with our seeming endless fascination with flight, all the way back to Tom Cruise's classic Maverick role in "Top Gun" or Steven Weber's part as Brian Michael Hackett on the sitcom "Wings."

So what makes pilots so darn interesting? Is it the cool, starchy hats? The ability to address an entire plane with crackly cockpit announcements? The jet-setting lifestyle? Our own marginal understanding of how tough the job is?

It's all of the above, according to pop culture experts and a commercial pilot-turned-air show performer who will be featured at the Air and Water Show this weekend. That aerobatic airman, Rob Holland, said he is constantly noticing nods to his profession in pop culture.

"Percentage-wise, not a lot of people fly planes, and that may be a major reason people are intrigued," Holland said. "A lot of people have interest in things that they don't understand. I'd say of aviation in general, most people don't understand it."

And there are no signs of that fascination letting up.

NANCY STONE/TRIBUNE FILE

"Pilots have consistently been seen as having a glamorous job," said Aaron Gouveia of salary.com, which in 2006 surveyed 800 site users and saw overwhelming interest in and awe over the pilot profession.

"When you say you're a pilot, you are automatically interesting," Gouveia said. "Take [Chesley] 'Sully' Sullenberger, for example," he said of the pilot who successfully landed a commercial airliner on the Hudson River in 2009, an event that came to be known as the Miracle on the Hudson.

"That's the kind of drama that turns piloting into a heroic feat and ups the glam factor," Gouveia said. "People want to be like you. On the other end of the spectrum, you say you are a garbage man, nobody wants to root around in garbage—but they do make a good living."

Holland, 37, is a former commercial and corporate airline pilot who nearly a decade ago fulfilled his longtime dream of becoming an air show instructor and performer. He says his current gig definitely drops more jaws than his previous positions.

Still, Holland said, his commercial and private piloting always has been considered cool to friends and acquaintances.

Adding to the cool factor, pilots are well compensated. A captain of a large commercial jet of more than 12,500 pounds makes about $116,547 per year, according to 2010 salary.com data. A captain of a jet less than 12,500 pounds earns an average of $100,503.

But don't let the salary suck you even deeper into pilot mystique, Holland warned with a laugh.

"Pilots don't get paid what they get paid for when things go right," Holland said. "They get paid for when things go wrong, and that can be a lot."

GET JET SET

You've got your beer. You've got your plate of snacks. Now all you need is some small talk to get this Chicago Air and Water Show party off the ground. Our advice: Stick to the aeronautical theme of the weekend. Here are some recent news items in the world of flight you can sprinkle into your party banter. You can thank us after the Thunderbirds finish rattling the windows.

REDEYE

Did you hear ...

... about Cathay Pacific? After some pics of a couple of crew members engaged in a sex act hit the Web last week, the airline postponed the launch of an ad campaign. Here's the best part: The ad slogan was supposed to be, "Meet the team who go the extra mile to make you feel special."

Don't believe ...

... that story about Soulja Boy buying a $55 million jet for his 21st birthday last month. One of the rapper's reps fed TMZ some bad information, and another one of his reps had to clean up the mess a few days later. But seriously, did anyone really think Soulja Boy bought a jet?

Go online ...

... and check out pictures of the new Batwing. Batman's airborne vehicle of choice appears to be getting a major overhaul if pictures from the Pittsburgh set of "The Dark Knight Rises" are any indication. Of course, we could see for ourselves if the franchise hadn't left Chicago.

If you think ...

... these jets on the lakefront are fast, you should check out the Falcon HTV-2 glider. It's an unmanned experimental military aircraft that is designed to travel at 20 times the speed of sound! The glider still needs work, though. During a test flight last week, it lost contact with ground control only nine minutes into flight. SOURCES: CNN, TMZ, MTV, REUTERS

'Toe shoes' put froggy feet forward

Newsday

And now for the latest in the "so ugly they're cute" category: "Toe shoes." These gloves for feet are poised to be the next big craze, following in the footsteps of FitFlops, Crocs, UGGs and Tevas, to name a few.

Vibram's Five Fingers footwear

$60 for kids; $75 to $125 for adults

Find this footwear, with "individually articulable" toe portions, at running stores and vibramfivefingers.com

Fila's Skele-Toes

49.99 for kids; $59.99 for adults

Fila's two-ply nylon, bungee cords and four-compartment design (two littlest toes share) allow for easy on and off. Find them at fila.com.

FROGGY'S TOO FREAKY? TRY THESE

If the froggy look creeps you out, fear not. Ugly isn't forever. Many brands have revamped their look, branching away from their all-function, no-frills origins and upping the aesthetics factor.

FitFlop's chic Charley boots

$240 at zappos.com

The boots are available next month. You can find other styles at amazon.com, piperlime.com and fitflop.com.

Crocs Hover slip-ons

$59.99 at crocs.com

The Hovers for men come in rich brown leather.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes Allstar suede pump

$69 at drschollsshoes.com

Famous Footwear stores also carry Dr. Scholl's Shoes.

Teva's Mush line

Various prices at teva.com

The Mary Janes and ballerina flats are just 3.4 ounces and collapsible, so they're easy to pack and perfect for travel.

Fiona Shaw on 'True Blood'
HBO

Real witches cry foul at portrayal on 'True Blood'

Reuters

Critics of sex and violence on TV have long complained about "True Blood," but now another group of wary citizens—real-life witches—have a problem with HBO's vampire drama.

In the current season, Wiccan leader and medium Marnie Stonebrook (Fiona Shaw) allows herself to be possessed by vengeful, dead witch Antonia. This is a big no-no, Wicca practitioners say. Marnie is reckless with her powers and makes witchcraft look "too easy," they say.

Christopher Penczak, co-founder and president of New Hampshire's Temple of Witchcraft, a religious nonprofit organization that teaches witchcraft worldwide, said he is worried about the damage Marnie's character could do to the reputation of witches everywhere.

Witches don't just ask for spirits to enter them indiscriminately, as Marnie does, he says, and they're also not supposed to raise the dead. (This character is quite the rule-breaker, is she not?)

Elaanie Stormbender, a witch and mother of five who lives in Jackson, Miss., said all the members of the small community of witches to which she belongs are displeased with Marnie's behavior.

"When witches invoke a spirit, they take precautions and retain full control to banish," she said. "Marnie didn't stay in control, so she's entirely to blame for giving herself over to being possessed."

Marnie's behavior also feeds into some people's fears about witches tampering with forces beyond their control, and the character's recklessness only reinforces this fear, Stormbender said.

The portrayal of Marnie hasn't made all witches want to cast a spell on the "True Blood" viewership.

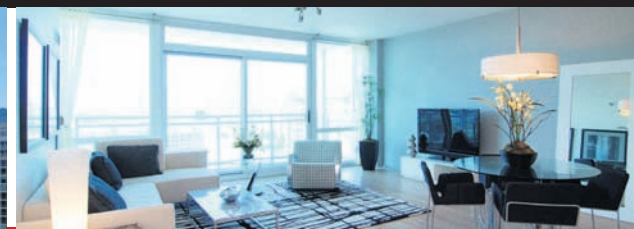

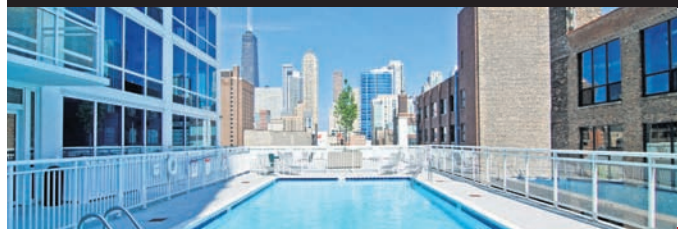

"My witch friends are rabid fans of 'True Blood,' and watch it every week," said Ellen Dugan, a witch and priestess of a six-member coven she co-founded in St. Louis.

Dugan, the author of "Practical Protection Magick" and "Natural Witchery," conceded that Marnie's portrayal contains a sensational element but noted that her witch friends laughed during a recent levitation scene.

"Most witches have a good enough sense of humor," she said.

“You don’t have to be a vampire to partake in such activity, but it takes it to an extreme.”

—COLIN FARRELL

bad boy vampire

Colin Farrell in ‘Fright Night’

Reuters

For years, Colin Farrell’s reputation as a party boy preceded him, but now he seems to have channeled his wild impulses into inspired performances in films such as “Horrible Bosses,” “In Bruges” and “The Way Back.”

In his new movie, “Fright Night,” a 3-D update of the 1985 comedy cult favorite that opens Friday, Farrell stars as Jerry, a sinister vampire who moves in next door to a naive high school student (Anton Yelchin) and his mother (Toni Collette).

The Dublin-born Farrell talked about making the film, playing a vampire and why audiences love to be scared.

You just played a horrible boss and now a vampire. That must be fun for an actor to do such varied parts back to back.

Yeah, but it’s a shorter road between the two than you might imagine—two fun characters. I felt like I’d had four or five years where I’d done more dramatic pieces and played characters that weren’t really having a good time in their lives for a variety of reasons, and I’d wanted to do something lighter. Then these two films came along, and it was happy days—time to go and play.

What about the vampire teeth?

Easy! They do the mold, then file them down, and you don’t even notice them wearing them. And it’s great fun. You put them in, and instantly, because of all the films you saw as a kid, you start acting a certain way.

Sexy. Vampires have always been sexy.

Always, and that’s the appeal. Human beings are always trying to bend and manipulate time to be in their favor and trying to defeat the ravages of age. And vampires are eternally young, although it’d probably be very annoying to be turned into one at 97, or 6. And then how they attack and feed off their prey seems very sensual and erotic—biting the neck. You don’t have to be a vampire to partake in such activity, but it takes it to an extreme. Blood is the liquid of life.

Were you a big horror fan?

Huge! Growing up I loved “Nightmare on Elm Street,” “Halloween” and “Friday the 13th,” and there was nothing like being scared. And still to this day, just sitting in the cinema and being frightened and sharing laughter—there’s nothing like it.

Why do people love to be scared so much?

I think it’s just anything that allows us to feel in life. ... To have some visceral reaction in life to get that adrenaline going is a good thing. It makes you feel alive.

‘Fright Night’
(R)

There’s an awfully heavy whiff of “been there, done that” in this remake—both because viewers could use a break from vampire stories and because “Fright Night” is so straightforward and surprise-free. It’s something of an achievement that the movie moderately succeeds anyway, mostly because Colin Farrell’s playful vampire villainy and David Tennant’s awesome turn as an arrogant British magician from whom Charley (Anton Yelchin) seeks vampire-killing advice. The CGI-heavy movie’s not scary but intense, not hilarious but amusing, and not fully rewarding but fun in the details. Good enough.

'Spy Kids: All the Time in the World in 4D'

'Spy Kids 4' lets you smell action

Los Angeles Times

Moviegoers, at least in the U.S., are showing a waning interest in 3-D. So Hollywood is looking to solve the problem as only it can: by adding a new dimension.

This time, it's not your sight but your smell that's being brought into the equation: "Spy Kids: All the Time in the World in 4D" director Robert Rodriguez is promising to throw audiences "nose first into the fourth dimension" this weekend when the latest installment in his family-friendly series opens with "Aroma-Scope," a scratch-and-sniff experience.

Rodriguez said he was inspired to add scent to his new movie after catching a whiff of the diaper of star Jessica Alba's baby. Which should serve as a warning that not all of the odors in "Aroma-Scope" are of the sweet sort.

The director says he thought the low-tech "Aroma-Scope" would be popular with his young fan base, and a way to make the movie more interactive. And parents will be happy to know that it's not going to cost a dime extra on top of the 3-D.

So how does it work? When you enter the theater and collect your 3-D glasses, you also get a card embedded with eight numbered icons. When a digit flashes on screen, it's time to scratch the square with that number and inhale.

"The nice thing about cards is, if you don't want to smell, you don't have to," Rodriguez said. "You're doing it by your own will-power."

THE HELP

@veezworld: @RedEyeChicago review: The Help - A sanitized, micro version of the book, but well done. A complex issue scrubbed for one demographic.

@jbmarshal: @redeyechicago THE HELP. Good performances. Script could have used a few more drafts.

@HarkiQuinn: @redeyechicago If you have a soul you will cry your eyes out during "The Help"

@GrouponKT: The Help was incredibly inspirational and educational. It made me laugh out loud, cry and thankful to be free.

@addiecourtney: the help was the best movie adaptation of a book I've ever seen. It's one I'll buy & watch again. Great cast-amazing story

RISE OF THE PLANET OF THE APES

@dgerken81: @redeyechicago do not see Rise of Planet of the Apes. Remake fail!

@chrispetlak: We saw Rise of The Planet of the Apes. Well acted, good story, fun to watch. It was a barrel of monkeys. Lithgow steals it!

OTHERS

@Tom2Tymes: @redeyechicago I just seen final destination it was only good for the 3d effects absolutely no point/plot

@metaltjohnradio: went to a early screening of Fright Night. It slaps the original and fans of it in the face.

'Spy Kids: All the Time in the World in 4D'

The scoop on latest 'Spy Kids'

MCT

Why didn't the Weinstein Co. screen the PG-rated "Spy Kids: All the Time in the World in 4D" for critics? The studio would only say, "The film will not be available to screen pre-release." Well, OK. Here's what we can tell you.

What is it: Robert Rodriguez's fourth episode brings in new young super-spies to fight the Timemaster, who's out to rule the world. Jessica Alba, Jeremy Piven and Joel McHale all star, and Ricky Gervais voices a robot dog.

Why we'd see it: Aroma-Scope! Viewers are prompted to rub and sniff a card at different moments.

Why we wouldn't: Time travel is hokey.

Jason Momoa
REUTERS

Momoa who? Oh, the new 'Conan'

Reuters

Jason Momoa may not be a household name from Hollywood yet, but neither was Arnold Schwarzenegger when he took on the title role of "Conan the Barbarian" in 1982.

Nearly 30 years later, Momoa could see a similar star-making trajectory if moviegoers embrace him as the new, 3-D incarnation of "Conan the Barbarian," opening Friday. If there's one person who hopes they will, it is Momoa.

"Conan [is] going to give me star status," he said of his hopes for a movie that breaks him out of the pack of Hollywood actors. "It's going to put me in leading-man roles."

Based on pulp fiction writer Robert E. Howard's sword and sorcery fantasy stories, the "Conan" reboot follows Conan from boy to man as he embarks on a mission to avenge the murder of his father, which then turns into an epic battle to save an entire nation from a supernatural evil.

Unlike Schwarzenegger, who, at 35, was a bodybuilding champ but a relative newcomer to Hollywood movies when he took the "Conan" role, the 32-year-old Momoa has 12 years of work under his belt. But only his hard-core fans, including followers of HBO series "Games of Thrones," likely know he's got the acting skills, not to mention the muscles, to wield Conan's weapons.

Born in Honolulu, Momoa was raised by his single mother in Iowa, where he never felt like he fit in with his exotic looks inherited largely from his native Hawaiian father. After high school, in an attempt to "get to know my father better," Momoa went back to Hawaii, where his looks became an asset. Modeling gigs followed, then came an opportunity he could never have predicted—a gig on "Baywatch."

"I was 19 and folding T-shirts in a surf shop," Momoa said. "And I got chosen out of 1,300 people to play a lead role on 'Baywatch Hawaii.' I didn't even know how to act."

That led to another Hawaii-based show, "North Shore," which lasted only a year, and after that, a dry spell.

"It took me five years to get an agent after 'Baywatch,'" Momoa said.

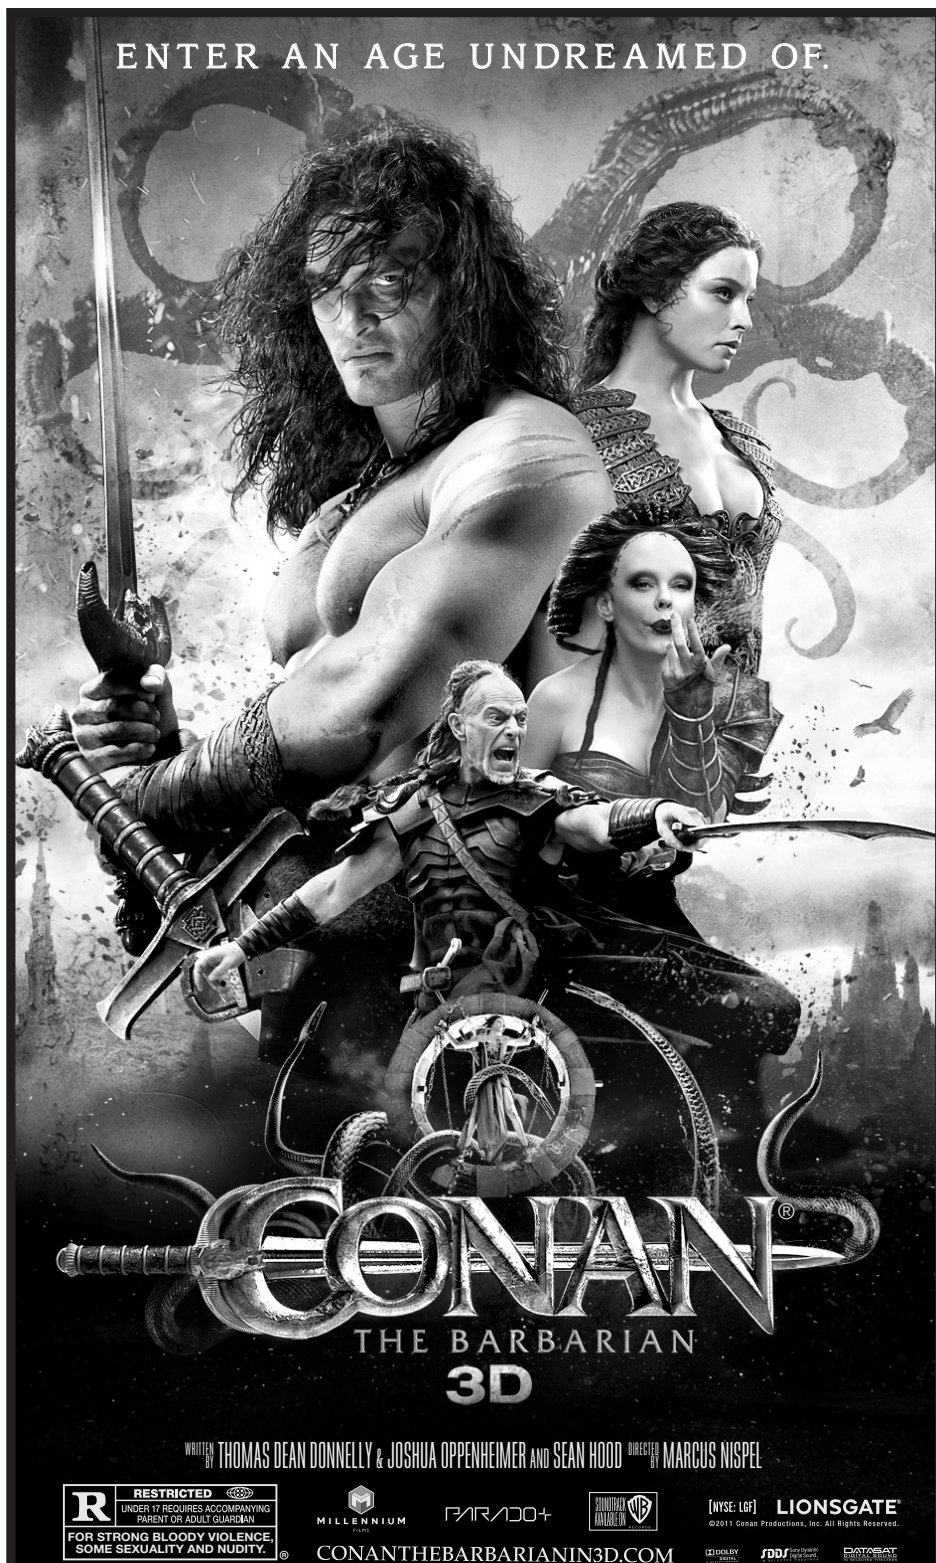

"No one would take me seriously because it was 'Baywatch.' I lived in the shadow of that for a long time."

Eventually he landed the role of the dreadlock-wearing warrior Ronon Dex in the Syfy series "Stargate: Atlantis," where he was quickly embraced by sci-fi fans. The show lasted on TV for five seasons.

His career took another fortuitous turn when he was cast as powerful warlord Khal Drogo in "Game of Thrones." "It was the first project in my life where I was like, 'I have to have this, no one is gonna take this from me,'" Momoa said. "It was the first thing I've ever fought for."

Though his career is moving at a faster pace now, Momoa paused to reflect about first seeing himself on the big screen in "Conan," complete with the physical transformation that included an additional 25 pounds of muscle.

"There's moments you look at yourself," he said. "And wow, it's kinda cool."

Jason Momoa
as Conan in
'Conan The Barbarian'

Muscles! Swords! Grunts!

Ahnold has nothing to fear from 'Conan' remake

I guess when you're born in the middle of a battle and your dad lifts you to the heavens and screams, your chances of growing up to be, I don't know—a florist—are slim. Nevertheless, Conan (Jason Momoa) develops into quite the bloodthirsty maniac when, as a man, he seeks revenge against the brute (Stephen Lang of "Avatar") who killed his father (Ron Perlman). Conan's other agenda: Boycotting shirts.

Worth noting: At least in 1982's over-long, kinda entertaining take on the legendary character, Arnold Schwarzenegger looked like a supersized human tank motivated to grow into a fighter after a scrawny youth. The new Conan is just a generic buff dude with an '80s hair metal 'do and disturbingly vicious battle skills that kick in before puberty. His speech patterns also vary between "sentences" like "Woman! Come here!" and "I know not; I care not," unintentionally suggesting a flicker of a poet within the soul of a guy who as a child cuts someone's nose off. (The victim's accidentally hilarious reaction, in case anyone missed what happened, is shouting, "My nose!")

The verdict: The script for "Conan the Barbarian" must have had a lot of exclamation points, broken up only by scene descriptions such as, "Conan yells and stabs. Body count: Every extra that's available." Conan has impressively perfect aim when firing a person in a catapult but is barely more likable than the so-called bad guys. The incoherent film's sickening brutality occasionally takes a break so someone can thrust his sword to the sky and shriek. Sadly Morgan Freeman, who I-kid-you-not narrates the film's opening, doesn't get to join in.

Did you know? Conan rescues a group of slaves largely comprising beautiful women with their considerable breasts exposed, and almost immediately they become the dancing, smiling entertainment at the party that follows the battle. This is a long way of explaining why seven actresses are credited as "topless wench," not, "exhausted, traumatized slave." MATT PAIS IS REDEYE'S MOVIE CRITIC

Give it

We dig into Logan Square's newest off-the-beaten-path restaurant

By Lisa Arnett

Organic, seasonal and local produce. Another “upscale” sports bar. Small plates, small plates, small plates. There’s nothing wrong with these trends in dining, but lately I’ve been craving something

Because the name means “blue corn dough” ...

I felt obligated to try one of the appetizers featuring it. Not so excited about standards such as the salsa or ceviche with a mix of white and blue corn chips, my dining pal and I went for the parmesan-dusted fried artichokes in a blue corn “nest” ($8). These crispy, cheesy little guys are almost as addictive as cheddar popcorn; give me a bag of them to take to the movies, and I’d crunch to my heart’s content. A dish of ancho chili aioli for dipping rather than just a drizzle on the plate would make me even happier.

File this under “jobs that are cooler than yours”:

Jason Lerner, who teamed up with his wife, Valerie, and chef friend Alvaro Chavez (Depot Nuevo, The Noodle in the northern ‘burbs) to open the restaurant, spent months researching artisanal tequilas to fill the drink menu.

Unless you’re a tequila expert (I don’t claim to be), rely on your server’s recommendations from the list of 100-plus tequilas spanning four styles: unaged blanco, slightly aged reposado, anejo (aged at least a year) and extra anejo (aged three or more years). They’re all high-quality enough for sipping, not shooting, but most diners are drinking the cocktails, which Lerner brought on Jenny Kessler (a partner and brand ambassador for Adam Seger’s Hum liqueur) to assist with. Not all are created different.

That’s when Masa Azul caught my attention. Promising Southwestern spice and lots of tequila, this clean-cut storefront opened this week on the border of Logan Square and Avondale. Hoping it was a hidden gem, I hopped the Blue Line and prepared to shake up my cuisine routine.

Watch out, Popeyes.

Masa Azul sits on a strip of Diversey with more “for rent” signs than anything, fragranced with wafting fumes of fried chicken from the aforementioned chain. While plenty of locals might be content to go to Zacatecas down the street for cerveza-fueled Spanish karaoke or San Luis next door for cheap chorizo or lengua tacos, Masa Azul leans toward contemporary Southwestern American more than traditional Mexican and gives residents a hip little hangout without having to walk all the way to the Square.

Fried artichoke hearts in a blue corn nest equal, but the ones that are on point are killer. The signature Masa Azul margarita upgrade to the Don Modesto reposado tequila ($11) instead of the basic blanco ($9), was rich and zingy, one of the best I’ve had all year. The Crema de la Cosecha ($9) with Del Maguey crema mezcal, creme de violette and guava nectar, was smoky but watery, while the Hot Seniorita ($10), with anejo tequila, ginger, prickly pear and papaya juice, was right on for those who shun too-sweet drinks.

Every entree looks good. The main course list isn’t massive, but it’s full of simple, tasty-sounding choices: coffee and pepper-crusted beef medallions, chipotle scallops with poblano-blue cheese sauce, ancho chili red trout with mango salsa.

Masa Azul
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE PHOTOS

The Three Amigos ($19) is the house combo platter of cornbread-stuffed quail with a sweet honey-glazed skin outside and tender meat inside, a good-enough duck tamale and a corn-and-bean-stuffed Anaheim pepper that was all heat and no other discernible flavors. A pair of shrimp corn cakes ($18) with roasted red pepper remoulade was refreshing, but the accompanying garlic rice and broccoli were like the Toms of side dishes: plain and not especially pretty, but you feel bad dissing them because they mean well.

In the dessert department... our server gushed about the chocolate peanut butter pot de creme ($7). While pot de creme should silkily slide off your spoon and tongue, this was thick, fudgy and sticky—not bad, just not expected. I wasn't blown away at first by the tres leches cake (Kristoffer's in Pilsen is my measuring stick), but I did end up nearly finishing the massive slice ($7).

Bottom line: When the cocktails are good, they're very, very good, but the food we tried isn't at a showstopper level yet. For now, I'm happy to have Masa Azul as a fun hangout for the neighborhood that's not yet destination-worthy like other central Logan Square faves such as Lula, Longman & Eagle and Ciao Napoli. LISA ARNETT IS THE METROMIX DINING PRODUCER.

FEST FRIDAYS

NORTH SIDE SUMMERFEST

Lincoln Ave. and Irving Park Road
Time: Noon-10 p.m. Saturday, 11 a.m.-9 p.m. Sunday
Cost: $5 donation

Escape to North Center

Grab a hot dog and enjoy the cover bands
at Summerfest

LOOK

Fancy yourself a follower of competitive eating events around the world? Get to the fest by 2 p.m. Sunday to catch a hot dog-eating contest in person—or flex your beefy muscles by entering yourself. Call 773-665-4682 for more information.

LISTEN

Cover bands, unite! This fest boasts one of the largest lineups of cover bands, as well as a few local indie favorites. Saturday, see '80s band Sixteen Candles, band with "songs that make you do things" Rod Tuffcurls, and Jon Langford's (of The Mekons) alt-country band The Waco Brothers. For Sunday's must-see acts, check out cover bands Hairbangers Ball and Wedding Banned, who never fail to move soles—we're saying your feet most likely will hurt from all of the bouncing.

(FOOD) LUST

This fest goes to the hot dogs—grab unique interpretations on the classic Chicago-style hot dog from local restaurants setting up shop on the street. Black Rock, Pitchfork Food & Saloon, Browntrout and Sola are worth a pass-by on your way to grab a beer.

TOP SHOWS

MUSIC CRITIC MATT PAIS' PICKS

Katy Perry

The pop star finally arrives in town after postponing her previously scheduled July show. Now that she's not performing on the same night as Britney Spears, the show seems a little less discussion-worthy. But still. Those outfits are clearly what Perry wants you to focus on, not her "voice." With Natalia Kills.

7:30 p.m. Sun. $35-$45. Allstate Arena, 6920 Mannheim Road, Rosemont. 847-635-6601.

Manchester Orchestra

If you saw them at Lolla, you already know why. If you didn't, count on the Atlanta rockers to transform solid songs into thunderous epics. Andy Hull's voice is awesome.

Blink 182, My Chemical Romance headline.
7 p.m. Sat. $10.50-$63. First Midwest Bank Amphitheatre, 19100 Ridgeland Ave., Tinley Park. 877-598-8703.

GETTY IMAGES

I Fight Dragons

You've been waiting for a while for the Chicago chip-tune rockers to drop their full-length debut. Guess what? It's coming in October, and I'm excited. With It Is What It Is, Stamps.

7:30 p.m. Sat. $12-$14. Lincoln Hall, 2424 N. Lincoln Ave. 773-525-2508.

The Damned Things

Maybe you don't want to hear a band featuring members of Fall Out Boy and Scott Ian of Anthrax. That's OK. If you do, however, you'll be rewarded with some deliciously nasty hard rock. Nothing great, just good and jagged. With Maylene and the Sons of Disaster, Fair to Midland.

7 p.m. Fri. $20-$22. House of Blues, 329 N. Dearborn St. 312-923-2000.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Music critic Matt Pais asked: You can ask one musician (dead or alive) one question. What is it?

Some answers we liked:

GOOGLE+

Ryan Brinkerhoff

i'd love to ask Kurt Cobain his opinion of online music proliferation and the "piracy" struggle with the RIAA

Cj Gorelik

I would ask Frank Sinatra the extent of his connections with the mob.

Richard Espinosa

I would ask Bradley Nowell from sublime if he was ok with his band finding someone else to play their original songs with. Bradley created music for his fans, is it wrong that one fan in particular is chosen to replace him?

Mana Ionescu

To Amy Winehouse and/or Whitney Houston: "What is the one single moment, the one decision made that single moment that you would change if you could go back"

Brandon Torres

I'd simply ask Kurt Cobain 'why?'

Alan Kercinik

Pete Best: How angry are you, exactly?

TWITTER

@psshyaitsBIA

I'd ask Beethoven what his music sounded like to him in his mind after he lost his hearing.

@mselizabethash

Janis Joplin: Who is "Piece of My Heart" about? And did you smoke a lot of cigs to get your voice like that?

@TheFiveThreeSix

Hey Jack White, want to hang out?

FACEBOOK

Brian 'Gov' Bickham

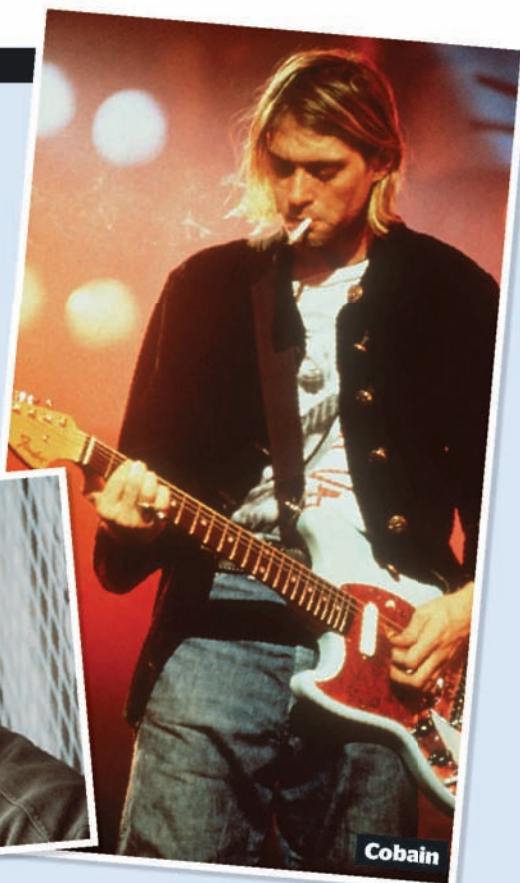

Hmmm...

Biggie: "Was it Tupac?"

Tupac: "Was it Biggie?"

Colin Joliat

I'd ask Peter Frampton if he feels like I do.

Anne envy

Five reasons why the 'One Day' actress is having the best week ever

By Ariel Alexovich | REDEYE

Anne Hathaway has been all over TV this week promoting her new movie "One Day," which would be annoying if she weren't so darn likable. She's like us, only famous (or so we'd like to think). We'll admit we're jealous she gets to attend glamorous film premieres in drool-worthy gowns, but we don't begrudge her success because she's also been striking all the right chords in public. Here are five reasons why Miss Hathaway is having the best week ever. ARIEL@TRIBUNE.COM | @MISSARIEL

1 She may be off the hook for the Oscars.

Billy Crystal hinted this week that he'd like to host again. The quicker we move on from whatever that was with James Franco, the better.

2 She's got to be close to wrapping up shooting for 'The Dark Knight Rises.'

In other words, she's almost done subsisting on her Selena Kyle/Catwoman diet of "kale and dust," as she described it on "Chelsea Lately" on Wednesday.

3 She's a surprisingly competent rapper.

Yeah, this typically chic gal can drop a few rhymes. Hathaway told Conan O'Brien that the paparazzi have been intense as she films "The Dark Knight Rises" in Pittsburgh, so she made up a rap inspired by Lil Wayne. It starts with the line, "I'm a paparazzi, I don't play no Yahtzee."

4 She has a dirty sense of humor.

Hathaway mooned her hunky co-star Jim Sturgess on the set of "One Day," but, whoops, she said other lucky folks also caught a glimpse. "I decided to be a little naughty and go for it, and it blew right up in my face," she told "Today's" Matt Lauer.

5 Even after all this, she still seems totally normal and relatable.

To prep for her Selena Kyle role, she told Interview, "I actually had this moment when I convinced one of the assistant directors on the London portion of the film to get a cat with me." It didn't work out, so she says she "turned to YouTube" for cat videos. (So do we!)

The 'Blade' is back

Ridley Scott is returning to his roots, revisiting his definitive—and beloved—cyberpunk film "Blade Runner" for Alcon Entertainment. Filmmakers haven't hired a writer and are still figuring out what the story will be, producer Andrew Kosove told TheWrap on Thursday. One thing they do know: It won't be a remake—prequel or sequel, baby! WARNER BROS. PICTURES PHOTO

Where there's a Will ...

Is Big Willie back in style? He could be. Almost in passing, producer La Mar Edwards told xxlmag.com that, oh yeah, he's got something going with the Fresh Prince. "We're working on Will Smith, bringing him back," Edwards said. "That's actually him on the other line right now." What are you waiting for? Pick up the phone!

Silverman and single

Maybe she'll be "[bleeping] Matt Damon" again. NBC will produce a comedy pilot starring Sarah Silverman (left) in which she plays a woman trying to readjust to single life after a long relationship, according to thr.com. Art imitating life, eh, Sarah?

"We're definitely going to lay it down and get it done."

—Amber Rose to globalgrind.com on her plans to make a baby with boyfriend Wiz Khalifa (both above)

COMMON STORY

Common's memoir, "One Day It'll All Make Sense"—also the title of his 1997 album—doesn't come out until Sept. 13, but already it has received high praise. Maya Angelou is quoted on the cover, calling the Chicago MC's book "a magnificent memoir." And according to the book's Amazon description, each chapter begins with a letter from the Chicago rapper to an important person in his life, including his daughter, friend Kanye West and ex-girlfriend Erykah Badu. Sounds juicy. TRIBUNE FILE PHOTO

THE DIGIT

That's the number of Pearl Jam songs on a soundtrack to "Pearl Jam Twenty," a documentary about the band, according to billboard.com. They revealed the track names Thursday in a worldwide scavenger hunt.
